

Hello everybody! Welcome back to Wacky Wednesday! You should be able to discern what today's article is about simply by virtue of the cover image, but just in case you can't... You know those big scary men from those horror films you've seen? What if, and this is just a hypothetical, what if you were single and ready to mingle, but only with serial killers, undead momma's boys, and nightmare weirdos. If you meet those very specific requirements, you're in luck, because here's a comprehensive list of the pros and cons of embarking on a long, emotional journey with one of these sexy, very available singles.

Jason Voorhees

This is a very good idea if you like the strong, silent type. Jason literally never speaks. Like ever. But one thing he can be is a shoulder to cry on. He just won't comfort you verbally. Like I said, strong and silent. If you like swimming, I have good news! So does Jason... well he's good at it, but he might be a little scared. He died as a child by drowning, you see.

Some other things that might be useful to know is that he might disappear on you randomly. Not for long periods of time, but like minutes or hours. Stealthily. He's also really fast. If you're sad, he might appear out of nowhere to give you some hot chocolate or a teddy bear. He also really likes animals, so if you wanted to get a cat or a dog, he wouldn't have any protests.

One drawback, besides the fact that he's a murderer, is the fact that he won't stop thinking about his mom. She's the only person who ever really loved him. He's a very affectionate person, as demonstrated by the fact that he still keeps his mom's severed head (which might have to be placed in your house somewhere if you decide to move in with him, which would probably stink) with him at all times.

Another thing is that if this is a long-long-term relationship, Jason will far exceed your lifespan. He legit cannot die, which means dating Jason is like owning a turtle. You will always die before he does. Also, the police might investigate your neighborhood at some point because teenagers have been disappearing near the area.

That strong, silent type nature might lead to communication issues, as well. He literally never speaks, as I've said before. Communication is a key facet of any relationship, and if Jason can't do that, how healthy will this relationship really be?

All in all, however, his fierce protectiveness and affectionate, devoted nature is more of a benefit than a con. He would defend you if he truly cared about you, and if you really hate someone, get prepared to move out of where you're currently living, because he might do something rash about it.

Addressing the communication issues, he could learn some form of sign language, which might help him express some of his frustration if not verbally, then at least linguistically in some form or another.

For me, Jason Voorhees is probably a 8/10 on the datability scale.

Freddy Krueger

The man of your dreams! He'll haunt your nightmares! Change your reality! Maybe kill your friends! Don't trust him! He's kind of a weirdo!

Ok, Freddy is a strange case, because of his inherently supernatural nature. He legit has magic powers. He can cause the easiest lucid dreaming of your life, as long as you don't mind a little blood and gore, and trauma. He also has an awesome song that could cause nightmares completely separate from the ones he'll cause with his magic powers.

Freddy's main gimmick is that he mainly exists in a dream world, and when pulled into the real world, he's just a normal fella. A normal fella with a weird knife glove, but still. And if you die in the dream, you die in real life! Oooooooooo! Spooooooky!

He's also a funny dude! I guess from being undead and nigh unkillable, a certain dark humor naturally coalesces. He is a burn victim, which means there's some therapy that might need to occur. Heck, therapy probably needs to happen to all of these guys. They're all deeply messed up.

One of the positives of Krueger's whole being is his intense and stylish drip. He could lend you his sweaters. He's also got a cool hat, and he made that weird knife glove himself!

Aww, he's an artist! He could fix up a house! Don't check under the floorboards, you'll find worse than a beating heart. Your house will also have to have a boiler room. That's just his particular hangout spot. He likes it.

And if you need something that's across the room? Go-go-Freddy extending arms! He can grab it for you!

Some cons. He kills children. That's the whole reason he was set on fire in the first place. Kids are probably out of the question. He doesn't like them. He's also weirdly sadistic, and probably wouldn't be very sensitive to your needs and wants. He's really mean, is what I'm trying to get across.

You might also never know what's real and what's fake. Both relationship-wise and reality-wise. It would be really easy for him to pull the wool over your eyes. Like really easy. Why wouldn't he just lie to you constantly?

And he probably would! He's not a very nice man, even if you put aside all the killing like we did for Jason. But if you could crack through the acidic, burned exterior and make him truly happy for the first time in his life, he'd be eternally grateful.

However, the drawback of him being super mean and a big ol' jerk is a little too much to ignore.

For me, Freddy Krueger is probably a 6.5/10 on the datability scale.

Michael Myers

He really hates his sister. He really does. If you want to gaze lovingly into the Blackest Eyes, you'll have to get over him constantly stabbing pictures of a woman you've never met. Sorry.

But anyway. Michael Myers. The Shape. Is he the right Shape for your heart? Let's find out. Unlike with Jason, his familial devotion is psychologically imposed. That sister he hates? Might not even be his real sister. And he has no other interests, other than killing, killing, and killing some more. He never rests, never sleeps.

He's emotionally unavailable. That seems like an anticlimactic flaw, after describing the ritualistic, methodical wave of murder he brings without end. But he really is. There's nothing, at least no compassion, behind the mask.

There's hatred, and then there's this guy. He transcends hatred into something unstoppable, unkillable, and almost inhuman.

He doesn't have an understanding of pain. He's a sociopath. He killed his big sister when he was 6.

Thanksgiving dinners are going to be awkward, is all I'm saying.

He, out of all of these guys, is the one that's going to need the most therapy. However, he has killed the only licensed therapist that could help him.

I don't know if there's a dictionary definition of a lost cause, but I feel like if you looked up that word in the Merriam-Webster dictionary, it would just be a picture of Michael Myers.

I mean, he's good with a knife, I guess? He could cook something for you?

With Michael Myers, there would be no such thing as a peaceful separation. If you tried to break up with him, he'd peacefully separate your head from the rest of your body. Or he'd wait 20 years and come back to your house to kill you.

Y'know, I just realized something. There really aren't any positives.

For me, Michael Myers is probably a 3.5/10 on the datability scale.

Hey! Thanks for reading whatever this was! If you enjoyed, please... I dunno, read more stuff I've written?

Thanks,

DMN Writer,
Cameron